Crown Lair Art Work

Artist Lloyd Hamrol created "Crown Lair" in 1989 as a site-specific sculpture. It serves as a visual link with the area's historic stagecoach stop and exists as a place more than an object. The color and visual composition of the sculpture reference the old Andres Ybarra adobe adjacent to the Artwork, capturing the character and essential quality of the ruins. The artwork also restores the interactive possibilities by the site because of the need to preserve the isolate the ruins.

The title of the work refers to the old adobe's former use as a stage station on the "El Camino Real" in contrast to the fortress-like quality created by the walls of the sculpture.

Welcome

Located in the Southeastern part of Carlsbad, Stagecoach Community Center and Park is a 28-acre facility meant to satisfy recreation enthusiasts. Dedicated in 1987, Stagecoach features multi use playing fields, a balance mix of active and passive play areas, outdoor tennis and basketball courts, shaded picnic areas, art sculpture and preserved adobe ruin walls from the 18th century stagecoach stop.

Stagecoach Ruins

The Stagecoach Adobe Ruins complex are all that remain from the day when Anfreas Antonio Ybarra occupied his ranch house on 4,431 acres he called Rancho Encinitas. Ybarra, a Mexican national and military leader, was granted the land surrounding Stagecoach Park from the Mexican government. Later, the United States took possession of all of "Alta California", forming the state of California, as we know it today. In 1868 J.S. Manasse and Marcus Schiller, two San Diego merchants, bought the ranch from Ybarra for a reported $3,000. The new owners opened the Manasse Stop for weary stagecoach travelers making the two-day trip between San Diego's Franklin Hotel and Los Angeles. With an overnight stay in San Juan Capistrano, the whole trip cost $10.
